Empathy

Empathy is the ability to understand another person's thoughts and feelings. Empathetic people really can, as they say, "put themselves in someone else's shoes."

Empathy is not the same thing as sympathy. While both words refer to the ability to understand another person's emotions, sympathy is less complex. It usually just means the ability to feel sorry for someone. (And feeling sympathy is not necessarily even kind – because sympathetic people may actually feel superior to the individuals they feel sorry for.) On the other hand, empathy requires you to actually experience the thoughts and emotions of the other person.

The process seems to be fairly simple: When we observe another person (their movements, facial expressions, or voice), our own bodies react in a similar way, and we recreate this same emotion within ourselves. We know that this ability appears quite early in life. For example, babies only a few months old react to their mother's smile or frown by smiling or frowning back. By the age of two, children may show signs of "feeling" another person's joy or pain. For example, if someone near them cries, they may suddenly become quiet and appear to be very sad themselves – even though they probably don't know why they feel this way. They may even try to comfort the other person by patting the person on the arm or shoulder.

1. Empathy is a simpler emotion than sympathy.
a. True b. False c. Doesn't say
2. Most people's emotions are limited.
a. True b. False c. Doesn't say
3. Empathy means going through the same feelings as someone else.
a. True b. False c. Doesn't say
4. A two-year-old child can understand when people are sad.
a. True b. False c. Doesn't say

Q Read the article. Add the missing sentences. Write the letters in the blanks. There is one extra sentence.

Earth Day

Earth Day is a yearly holiday that is dedicated to protecting the world's natural resources. The first Earth Day, which took place on April 22, 1970, was organized by an American senator as a nationwide protest against the increasing destruction of the environment. It drew about 20 million participants. Many people consider it to be the birthday of the modern environmental movement.

1. ____ It is estimated that in that year, over 200 million participants in 136 different countries took part in Earth Day celebrations.

2. ____ These can be educational, practical, or purely recreational. On Earth Day, some people may attend lectures and exhibits to learn about environmental problems such as deforestation and air and water pollution. Others may volunteer to participate in hands-on activities such as picking up litter or planting trees, or simply engage in fun activities such as hiking or bird-watching.

Although Earth Day has become very popular, it has been criticized for being merely a “feel-good” day that has had little effect. 3. ____ For example, between 1970 and 1990, the world's population has more than doubled, putting a huge strain on current resources. 4. ____

- Although there is an organization that coordinates some worldwide Earth Day activities, most events are organized by local environmental groups.
- Certainly, since the first Earth Day, threats to the world's environment have not decreased, but rather have become more and more serious.
- And people are only starting to understand the possibly disastrous effects of global warming and other trends.
- Governments around the world have officially recognized Earth Day.
- By 1990, interest in issues related to the environment had spread around the world.
